Educator, Artist, and Scholarly Researcher

Compassionate and contemplative pedagogies are combined with trauma-informed approaches to actor training to empower students to be dynamic performance authors and change makers. Great care is dedicated to fostering student-centered learning communities where students feel like they matter. Creative Research centers on the use of Noh, Margolis Method, and Lessac Kinesensics to create socially engaged devised, pre-scripted works, and solo works. Scholarly research explores Margolis Method as a new paradigm for actor training, uses of Lessac Kinesensics for neurodivergent students, and contemporary practices and development in Noh performance.

RESEARCH

Book Proposal

Margolis Method: Advancing Embodiment, Craft, and Care in Performance

Co-Editors and Authors: Elizabeth Parks, Kym Longhi

- This is the first book to provide an overview of the origins, theory, and applications of Margolis Method. Twenty-three practitioners within theatre and across performance disciplines detail their use of Margolis Method in the classroom, performance space and beyond in five key areas: Vulnerability in Performance, Acting, Directing/Devising, Converging Methodologies, and Cross-Disciplinary Applications.

Chapter included with Book Proposal

Evolving Stanislavski-based Acting through Margolis Method

This chapter examines the foundational connections between Margolis Method and Stanislavski's System of acting as rooted in a shared deterministic, causal world view. This shared world view allows Margolis Method to elucidate Stanislavski's concepts of intentions, tactics, and dramatic conflict through the devices of "Cause, Absorb and Effect, Transition" and "Stretching and Compressing the Space through Push and Pull."
